Risultati apprendimento previsti

Knowledge and Comprehension This course provides students a focused insight into the transnational legal dimensions of today's world and the opportunity to critically discuss and understand the different methods of making, interpreting and enforcing the law beyond the domestic legal orders. Expected Practical Skills Being capable of first advanced problem solving in laws interpretation and enforcement, writing a paper and delivering a public presentation on a given subject. This enables the attainment of further higher educational levels within the areas of interests of transnational law programs. Student attending the STIPL Course on a regular basis are expected to gain advanced knowledge in public/private international law, international organization and comparative legal systems getting acquainted with the state of the art scientific debate on the topic as well as with a deeper understanding of transnational legal conflicts and processes in a wider and integrated perspective.

Metodi didattici

PPT aided frontal lecturing: case analysis (I part); seminar-based teaching (II part). This is an introductory course; prior knowledge of public international law and EU law is assumed. Those who enrol in the STIPL Course must prove a good command of written and spoken English. You are expected to attend classes regularly. Active and quality participation in class may positively affect your final grade. Thus, attending the seminars you'll be committed to a meticulous preparation of the assigned materials. To facilitate our collective concentration, this class does not allow the use of laptops, smartphones, e-readers or other electronic devices.
